"JUST ONE LITTLE THING ON THIS DAY OF REMEMBRANCE"

JUST ONE LITTLE THING: ON THIS DAY OF REMEMBRANCE
During the aftermath of the unimaginable loss of losing our only child—Justin, a very dear friend Lynette, sent me a link to a story titled: How Grieving With Gratitude Changed Everything" from Maria Shriver's blog: "Architecture of Change". Reading it changed me...

The infinite trauma that Darrell and I have endured has recently catapulted me to a higher understanding of how I am going to live my life in the days and years to come. I can't imagine living this new life as anyone other than a determined, loving, and accepting mother as it is in sharing my story that I have emerged with the reborn driving force behind whom I have already started to become. Also, even stronger than my own belief in myself, I have come to experience an indescribable "knowing" within my soul that I have many companions during this difficult journey from my chrysalis – a catalyst moving me toward finding my voice, and my wings, once again.

Over these past 4 years I have become stronger, braver, more courageous, humble and very grateful. And I know that I am strong enough to take the first steps, brave enough to speak for those who can't, courageous enough to take a leap of faith during this pivotal moment in my life, humble enough to say a sincere thanks to those for reinforcing my transformational journey by allowing me a chance for discovery of life beyond tragedy, and finding my voice through words so I can help others find theirs.

I will always be Justin's Mom and Darrell will always be Justin's Dad. Justin is the gift that keeps on giving. We miss him every day and we will love and honor him forever with love.
